Gaafu Atoll (Huvadhoo Atoll) in the Maldives is one of the largest natural atolls in the world.

In 1962, the Maldivian government divided the vast Huvadhoo Atoll for easier administration and governance. The northern section became Gaafu Alif (GA) and the southern section became Gaafu Dhaalu (GDh).

What it's known for:

- Pristine Reefs and rich marine biodiversity. It's a top destination for diving and Snorkeling.
- Uncrowded islands and authentic Maldivian culture. Fewer resorts and more traditional island life.
- Unique dialect of Dhivehi spoken by locals, distinct from other atolls.

Gaafu is one of the least spoiled and most naturally rich regions of the Maldives.

Maldives Anemonefish (Amphiprion nigripes)

Bright orange with a single white stripe and a dark face, the Maldives anemonefish is only found in these waters. Here in Gaafu Dhaalu Atoll, sightings are rare and special.

Our house reef is part of a thriving ecosystem where this species can still be spotted in healthy numbers. Look closely in shallow Reefs near sea anemones.

- Endemic to the Maldives
- Most active in clear, sunlit lagoons
- Often found in pairs or small family groups

Ask the dive team where to find them. They're closer than you think.

Asian Koel
(Eudynamys scolopaceus)

The Koel bird is more often heard than seen. Its loud, rising call echoes through the coconut palms at dawn. Males are glossy black with red eyes, while females are speckled brown.

Here, Koels call from the treetops, especially during nesting season. The island's dense vegetation gives them plenty of cover.

- Known for their distinct two-tone call
- Active during early mornings and late afternoons
- Often perch high in trees or near fruiting plants

If you hear a rising "koo-Ooo," look up. A Koel is nearby, watching from the canopy.

Turtle
(Cheloniidae family)

Graceful and calm, sea turtles are a special part of Havodda's marine life. Green turtles and hawksbills both nest and feed in Gaafu Dhaalu Atoll.

At NH Collection Maldives Havodda, guests often spot turtles while snorkeling the house Reef or diving nearby sites. Some even swim right past the jetty.

- Air-breathing reptiles, often seen Surfacing
- Feed on seagrass, jellyfish, and coral sponges
- Hawksbills have narrow beaks; green turtles have round faces

Swim slowly and keep your distance. If you're lucky, a turtle might glide alongside you—unbothered, ancient, and wild.

Have you seen me?

Picasso Triggerfish (Rhinecanthus aculeatus)

Striking lines, bold colors, and a name inspired by art—this fish is hard to miss. The Picasso triggerfish glides through Havodda's Reefs like a living painting.

Here in Gaafu Dhaalu Atoll, it thrives in coral-rich zones with plenty of hiding spots. You'll spot them darting between rocks and Reef walls, especially in the outer house Reef.

- Recognized by angular lines and bright patterns
- Active during the day, solitary and territorial
- Often seen cruising Reef edges and sandy bottoms

Give them space—they're bold and unafraid, but they guard their turf. Watch and enjoy from a distance.

Fruit Bat (Pteropus giganteus)

Also called flying foxes, fruit bats are the Maldives' largest land mammals. With a wingspan over 1 meter, they glide silently above the trees at dusk.

At Havodda, you'll see them circling the coconut palms or hanging upside down in tall trees during the day. The lush greenery provides the perfect feeding ground.

- Feed on ripe fruit and nectar
- Play a key role in seed dispersal and pollination
- Active mostly at night or during sunset

Watch the sky around 6:30 PM. Those graceful silhouettes aren't birds—they're fruit bats heading out for dinner.

Oriental Garden Lizard (Calotes versicolor)

Quick and alert, this lizard shifts colors with its mood and surroundings. Males often flash bright red throats during mating season.

They dart across paths and climb low tree trunks. The tropical vegetation of the island gives them plenty of space to bask and hunt.

- Feeds on insects and small invertebrates
- Commonly seen sunbathing on rocks or branches
- Can change color from brown to red or gray

Look around the gardens during the day. If something zips away as you pass—it's probably one of them.

The Legend of Havodda

Many generations ago, a great king sailed the southern seas with six dhonis, searching for a place of peace. For days, the fleet crossed endless waters under sun and stars. But one night, a fierce storm rose without warning.

Waves tore through the ships. The sea swallowed some, while others drifted until dawn broke over a lonely island. The king and his men came ashore, tired but alive.

Here, they found shelter. Fresh water bubbled from the ground. Fruit grew wild. Fish filled the Reefs. So they stayed. They built homes, raised children, and passed down the story of how life began on this quiet patch of land.

It is said this island was the first in the atoll to awaken.

The name lives on. Ha in dhivehi means six. Vodda In the Huvadhu dialect comes from Odi, meaning ship.
Havodda — the island of six ships.

First Light:
New Year’s Countdown Party

Step into the Season of Life and Lights at NH Collection Maldives Havodda as we welcome 2026 with a beachfront celebration like no other. Surrounded by swaying palms and shimmering lights, the evening unfolds with vibrant rhythms, dancing on the sand, and festive cheer under the stars. As the final seconds of the year tick away, the island embraces a new beginning filled with energy, joy, and unforgettable moments.

Live Band

Start the evening with soulful tunes and lively performances by our resident band. Enjoy classic hits and island rhythms that set the perfect mood for a festive night.

DJ

After midnight, the DJ takes over with high-energy beats to keep the party going. Dance barefoot on the sand as we celebrate the first hours of the New Year.

Have you seen me?

Powder Blue Surgeonfish (Acanthurus leucosternon)

With electric blue coloring and a bright yellow dorsal fin, the powder blue surgeonfish is one of the most photographed Reef fish in the Maldives.

They're often seen in small schools feeding on algae along shallow coral shelves. The clear waters of Gaafu Dhaalu Atoll make it easy to spot their vibrant flash as they glide by.

- Highly active herbivores
- Prefer shallow Reef slopes and coral rubble zones
- Bright colors signal a healthy Reef environment

Look for them near the lagoon drop-off or Reef crest. Their color isn't just for show—it reflects the health of the waters around them.

Have you seen me?

Heron
(Ardeidae family)

Tall, silent, and still—herons are expert fish hunters. You'll spot them stalking the shallows with slow, careful steps.

Reef herons are common along the shoreline. Gaafu Dhaalu Atoll's quiet beaches and lagoons offer the perfect hunting ground.

- Feeds on small fish, crabs, and insects
- Often seen alone at sunrise or sunset
- Uses patience and precision to strike

Look along the water's edge. If it's standing still like a statue, it's probably a heron, waiting for the right moment to strike.

Have you seen me?

Big Plate Starfish (Choriaster granulatus)

With thick arms and a soft pink body, the big plate starfish looks like a living cushion on the seafloor. It moves slowly, almost unnoticed, but plays a vital role in Reef health.

At NH Collection Maldives Havodda, you might see one resting on sandy patches near coral blocks. Gaafu Dhaalu Atoll provides the calm, clean seabed this species prefers.

- Feeds on algae and small organisms
- Often found in shallow lagoons and Reef flats
- Known for its smooth texture and unique round shape

Don't pick it up. Let it be. These Reef residents do their part to keep the underwater world balanced.

Have you seen me?

Blacktip Reef Shark (Carcharhinus melanopterus)

Sleek, fast, and unmistakable with black markings on the tips of its fins, the blacktip reef shark patrols the shallows like a silent guardian.

You might see one gliding past the jetty or along the reef edge. In Gaafu Dhaalu Atoll, where reefs remain healthy and quiet, these sharks are a common but thrilling sight.

- Harmless to humans, often shy
- Prefer shallow, clear lagoons and reef zones
- Feed on small fish and crustaceans

Watch from above or snorkel slowly. Their presence means the reef is thriving. Respect the space, and enjoy the encounter.
